Strange Animals

Way back when, when I was a member of the John Birch Society, (an organization I endorse by the way) I had it explained to me that we had three specific groups of adversaries—liberals, socialists, and communists. As time went on I found this to be true. These three groups were diametrically opposed to all things truly patriotic and pro-American. At my advanced age now, I find this to still be true. Their vision for America, although they would steadfastly deny it, is the Chinese Communist Party's vision for America.

I also noted, a few decades back, as I got involved with the Southern Heritage Movement, that this worthwhile movement also had the same enemies—liberals, socialists, and communists. I also found it interesting that many people in the Southern Heritage Movement, even today, fail to realize or grasp this truth.

They fight their battles to preserve their Southern heritage one at a time as though each battle was a separate entity totally by itself and not related to any of the other Southern heritage battles.

In general, it has not occurred to many of them (although some realize it) that these attacks on their heritage and culture are all orchestrated by certain individuals and groups that are pretty well interlocked with one another.

When I see an assault on our Southern heritage the first thing I try to do is note the people involved in that attack and then try to check out any organizations they are involved with. Almost without exception those involved belong to some far-Left organization that has ties to other leftist organizations that are doing the same thing. So, please, don't try to tell me that all these attacks on our heritage are totally local and spontaneous. That's a crock and those that peddle it know that.

Groups like Antifa, who routinely trash our heritage are all on the left and they and a host of other less well known groups are all involved with helping one another. We need to start doing a little more homework and beginning to note the connections they have with each other and then we may begin to see how our enemies are all connected with each other in various ways.

Back in the old days when it was still considered evil to be a Communist, the Communist Party in this country and in others had what they called Communist Front Groups. These groups were organized and mostly run by Communist Party members but they had noble sounding names for themselves and they had members in them that did not realize they were part of a Communist front group—useful idiots as it were. They were not technically part of the Communist Party but they were run by Communists.

It's a little different today, but not all that much. If you look at some of these anti-South groups amongst us and scratch some of the leaders of them you will almost find, if not outright Communists, many who are ultra-liberals and socialists. Many of these are well on their way to being communists of one sort or another. They just don't realize it yet. Give them time.

One glaring example comes to mind—W. E. B. DuBois. He started out as a liberal and ended up joining the Communist Party before he died. He had been moving left gradually for years and finally went all the way and took the plunge into full-blown Communism.

Many of our so-called liberals today are potential candidates for some kind of communism.

So learn to start checking out your anti-South bigots and the groups they are affiliated with. You will find most all of them are connected with some sort of leftist group or groups. That should tell you who your real enemies are. As I said, some of our Southern Heritage folks realize this and point to it. But most do not and they need to learn.
