Who Decides What Is Taught in The Classroom?

By Al Benson April 12th, 2022

I think the title of this article is a question that needs to be answered. Who decides what goes down in a public-school classroom? Is it the individual teacher, the school board, or just who?

I just read an article on <https://thebluestateconservative.com> for 11/15/21 that was quite revelatory. It said, in part, “During a meeting of the Left Forum, two public school teachers were caught on video discussing how to slip communist dogma into classrooms. Wearing a ‘Tax the Rich’ shirt, Sarah Knopp, a Los Angeles high school teacher and teachers union activist who contributes to ‘The Socialist Review,’ and Megan Behrent a New York City public school teacher affiliated with the International Socialist Organization, participated in a panel discussion about injecting Marxism into classroom instruction. Across America, activist teachers, nearly all of whom vote Democrat, are pushing Communist doctrine on captive young minds, often with the tacit approval of Democrat school administrators, Democrat-controlled schoolboards, and the Democratic Party.”

These are shocking statements, but they raise questions. Who is behind this leftist campaign in schools to indoctrinate rather than educate students? Is it the teachers unions? Individual teachers? The school boards? And it seems we now have lots of socialist teachers in public school classrooms. Is this reflective of the makeup of the teachers unions? And if we now have lots of socialist teachers is this reflective of what the schools that train teachers are turning out?

I don’t have the answers to a lot of these questions but maybe some of my readers have some of them they’d be willing to share with us. I know one thing—the early public school system in this country was the product of Unitarians who denied the divinity of Jesus Christ, and socialists who had visions of government-controlled education at the expense of Christian education, which they wanted done away with. They couldn’t do it all at once as that would have given the game away—so they did it gradually, over the decades. Most people never had a clue what was going on, but what the anti-Christians did to public education has brought us to where we are now.

So how do you deal with socialist teachers unions and socialist school boards and socialist designers of curriculum? Reformation of this system is impossible because what can you “reform” an anti-Christian school system back to when its beginnings were dubious starting out? I have asked that question for years. No one has ever given me an answer. They just ignore the question or try to change the subject like good political operatives will do when confronted with something they don’t want to address.

Redress of grievances over what public schools have done to generations of kids are an exercise in futility because they feel they have done no wrong. If you don’t want your kids indoctrinated in socialism then it is you who are wrong and not the socialists. They have no plans to recant, only to advance their agenda—which is to propagandize your kids whether you like it or not! The only thing you can do with such a system is to separate from it. Get your kids out of it and keep them out. There are plenty of other educational options available. I have noted some of them over the years. Do some homework on your own and see what you come up with.
