Does It Really Make a Difference?

By Al Benson May 8th, 2022

Recently I had a bout of the Chinese Virus, referred to by the sanitized name of Covid 19. Both my wife and I had been vaccinated against it, but for me that seems to have made no difference. Thankfully, I was not overly ill with it—a sore throat, fever, runny nose, and loss of appetite for a few days and then it started to wear off. Maybe the version I got was this newer Omicron version, which is not nearly as lethal as earlier versions. I don't know. I had to do the ten-day quarantine thing and I thank the Lord it was not worse. I had a good friend that died from this thing while visiting relatives in New York.

What brought this to mind was that I talked to two nurses, both from different places—and neither one had much faith in the vaccines.

I asked them both this—seeing that I was vaccinated for it and then recovered from my bout with it, did all that make me immune from getting it again? Both of them said it did not!

In other words, vaccinations notwithstanding, I suppose I can get it again. So, I asked them both, what, then, is the purpose of the vaccine if it does not give immunity?

Both of them (and they don't know each other) rubbed their thumbs and forefingers together in the universal sign that money is involved. In other words, there is big money invested in promoting these vaccines. Somebody is getting rich off these vaccines—and it ain't the people being pushed to take them. One of the nurses mentioned Father Fauci and his involvement in all this. I have to admit that he has moved the goalposts so many times on this subject that most folks don't know upside down from inside out anymore. And I think the medical bureaucrats love to have it so. I don't know if Fauci is profiting financially or not. Let's just say it would come as no surprise if he was. Fauci is the quintessential bureaucrat.

Given all the twists and turns in the “science” he has presented us with, it sure seems possible. Although the nurses wear them because they have to with their jobs, neither one has much faith in these masks everyone is supposed to wear (except the elites who don't want to be bothered). It's nice to know at least some folks in the medical field share my sentiments.
